FLUID – Regional Poster Award for Young Designers

Savremeni dizajn se sve više identificuje sa pozitivnim društvenim trendovima. On predstavlja neizostavan oslonac u realizaciji i promovisanju novih tehnologija, socijalnih pokreta i kulturnih obrazaca koji se prepoznaju kao progresivni, osješćeni i modernistički. Ipak, na dizajn se jednako oslanjaju i ideologije potrošačkog društva, retrogradne i hegemonističke politike. Etički aspekti dizajnerskog i umjetničkog djelovanja sve su teže praepoznatljivi u globalizovanom umreženom svijetu. Dizajner ne može na njih uvjek da utiče iz objektivnih (egzistencijalnih) razloga, a često nije ni u mogućnosti da sagleda etički kontekst. Ipak, ponekad se čini da je dominantni narativ o pozitivnom društvenom uticaju dizajnerskih praksi samo maska za moralni otklon od svega što određeni dizajn implicira.

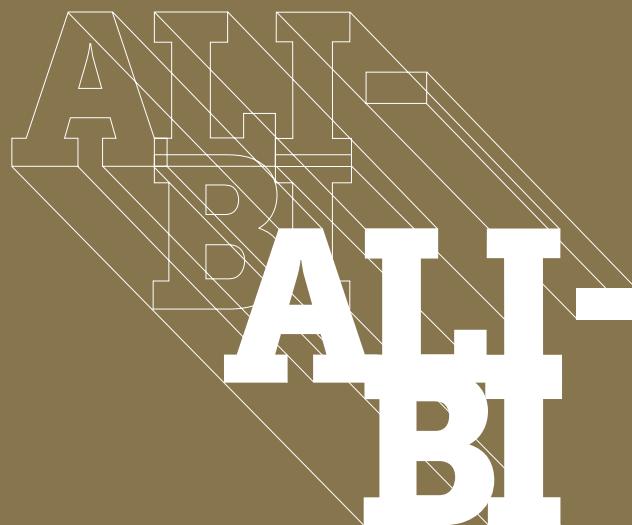

Ovogodišnje izdanje FLUID dizajn foruma baviće se etičkim dilemama u savremenim dizajnerskim praksama. Razmotriće se na koje sve načine dizajn stvara umjesto da razrješava probleme. Preispitaće se taktike koje dizajneri – svjesno ili nesvjesno – koriste da bi obezbijedili alibi za djelovanje suprotno svojim etičkim uvjerenjima.

Contemporary design is increasingly being identified with positive social tendencies. It has become an indispensable pillar in the realization and promotion of new technologies, social movements, and cultural norms that are recognized as progressive, knowledgeable and modernist. But design has also been utilized by the ideologies of consumerist society, as well as retrograde and hegemonic politics.

The ethical aspects of design and art work are becoming increasingly more difficult to identify in today's globalized world. The designer is not always able to affect these aspects because of objective, existential reasons, and is often unable to grasp the broader ethical context. However, it would seem that the dominant narrative of the positive social impact of design practices is sometimes merely a mask for moral withdrawal from all that design implies.

This year's edition of the FLUID Design Forum will address ethical dilemmas in contemporary design practices. It will analyze how design creates rather than solves problems. The Forum programme will review the tactics that designers use – consciously or unconsciously – to provide an alibi for acting contrary to their ethical principles.
